Fraud Corner

Summer brings warm days and long evenings, but unfortunately, also summer scams. One scam targets people looking for summer jobs. The following Summer Job Credit Application Scam was highlighted in an article titled "6 Summer Scams and How to Avoid Them" by ABC News:

It is not completely bizarre to need a background check before getting hired, but chances are that the young person in your life looking for a summer job is not applying to be a bank clerk or armored car driver. When it comes to providing personally identifiable information to an employer, use your head.

It is sadly a common occurrence that when kids are offered a "job," they provide their information for tax purposes, including their Social Security number, and then never hear back. The reason: The only "job" was a robbery.

Never provide sensitive personal information to a job site or anyone claiming to offer a job at the start of the process. Before you show up for an interview, make sure the job is legit: You can figure this out by doing an online search or making a few phone calls.
